No Munichs in South America

It is later than we thought. The scramble for South America, certain to follow the war in Europe, has not even waited for the war's end. It is already full force. The quick victories of Hitler in Norway, the Netherlands, Belgium, and northern France have made Reich Germans in every American country extremely cocky. A German "labor front" organization in Uruguay, perhaps even "storm troops," are only the latest and most virulent signs of Nazi organizations all over South America. Central America which are already interfering with the domestic life of the countries in which they appear. Entry of Italy into the war would, of course, add powerful Italian groups to these sources of trouble, and Japanese trade missions have again become extremely active. At any time groups like these may begin making demands on the governments to the south for special concessions and privileges which no government can properly grant. They may even foment domestic strife. Then these governments are faced with one of two alternatives; knuckle in, or fight back. In the first case, they risk becoming Rumanian and Hungarian. In the second they may become Poland or Spain. If deserted by their neighboring countries, they may become Czechoslovakias. The time has come to make it quite clear that the inter-American declarations and understandings reached at Lima and Panama mean what they say. At Lima, the 21 American republics unanimously agreed that in any situation menacing the independence of any of them, all would consult on how to meet jointly the menace. At Panama this decision was reaffirmed and implemented. It is important that any such action be joint action. It is true that the largest joint power would have to furnish the lion's share of protection. But that is only proper and right. The Latin countries know perfectly well that the United States wants no part of any of their territories. The Communist cry of "North American Imperialism" (while remaining silent on Nazi penetration into American countries) fools nobody. The Americas are all very much in the same boat. The tie that binds them is no longer merely a common devotion to freedom. It is now a specific menace of external influences and intrigues. The Americas stand together today as never before. Let us learn the lesson of Europe. Starting with small aggressions ("But

Bob Sikes Knocks Out J. McCarthy

Game Iowa Boy Takes Count in the Fifth Round

LITTLE ROCK — Fighting with the viciousness of a Dempsey and seeming to enjoy it like a kid in a wading pool, Bob Sikes of Pine Bluff knocked out young, game and almost as savage Johnny McCarthy of Davenport, Ia., in the fifth round of a hair-raising battle at the American Legion stadium last night.

A large crowd watched a new Sikes, fully recovered from a tonsillotomy, absorb the hardest punches that his lion-hearted opponent could deal out and then dim McCarthy's flinty fire with his own heavier guns. There were five knockdowns, four by Sikes and one by McCarthy.

AN EYE FOR A GAL BY HARRY HARRISON KROLL

YESTERDAY, Rossy's brawl with Hannah threatened to bring down reputations of school authorities upon them, but Judy arranged to have the affair forgotten. She pleads with Rossy to remember he has come to school to get an education. He questions her about her father's history. She explains that Rossy still believes Mr. Fulmer is the man who killed his father.

CHAPTER V

ROSSY McAfee went out for basketball, just to keep in training while waiting for the baseball season to open. But he was not much on the floor. He made the scrub team. But every day he warmed up with old Leacock, who kept the gym and helped to develop the pitchers.

After a while, Rossy settled down in his new life. He could eat in public without starting a riot, and Judy had kept the secret of his and Hannah's fight, so the campus never knew.

One day he said to Coach Hurd, "I got to get off, Coach."

"What for? How come?"

"I want to go home. Could I get off Friday and come back maybe by noon Monday?"

"Bub, you go back in them hills and hollers and somebody will ambush a good prime second-hand star pitcher."

"I know how to dodge ambushes. I know all the trails."

"I'll lay flowers on your grave and croon a sad yodel over the mound. So long."

ROSSY took the bus to Mountain City. From there he got the mail back out to Mint's Creek postoffice. From Pappy Mint he rented the loan of a mule that knew the stony roads and trails. He left the campus at 6 o'clock Friday and at 4 o'clock that afternoon he was jogging up a valley toward his mountain home.

Where the shadowy bridge trail came out on top of a mountain, he came to the picnic grounds and open land which formed the diamond next to Ebenezer church and school house. "Whoa!" Rossy said, and slipped from his mule.

There was a crude grandstand covered with dry brush, and Rossy went there and sat down, dropping into reverie. All at once that day flooded back upon him—the grounds there were filled with folks; the McAfees and Tollivers were out in force. Although Ebenezer was playing Cardover school, over the mountain, actually it was a game between the families. The Tollivers against the McAfees.

The feud was dozing but not sleeping. The past fall there had been a great camp meeting at Ebenezer, and all the parsons and exhorters were out in force to get the old heads of the clans to bury the hatchet. And so successfully had they labored in the vineyard that actually peace had been declared between the families.

Actually, of course, hate and distrust and grudge smoldered just beneath the surface of all this high fun and carryings on. The young pitcher on the mound was a Tolliver, "Sock" Tolliver, they called him. A handsome, dark fellow. Not much was known about him except that he had a mighty pitching arm, and when he was wild he couldn't hit a flock of barns with a long rifle.

Today he started out wild. Amidst the yelling of "Play Ball!" and the hubbub of the occasion, plus the Fourth of July spirit, and plenty of prime moonshine, he walked the first two men to face him, and the next two men to face him, and even poor Rossy could recollect the ferocious joy of his folks as his own father walked to the plate with the solid hickory bat that Jay McAfee had made with his own hand.

The ball came over. Rossy saw his father try to dodge it. It must have been a deep and confusing curve, for he couldn't avoid getting hit.

The bystanders, almost suffocating the squirming man on the ground, were pushed back by a deputy sheriff who was present. "Stand back!" he yelled. "Give him air! Here—two," he pointed out two men. "Toll him back of the grandstand, yon."

Barons Defeat Little Rock 9-4

LeFebvre, Traveler Ace Suffers His Third Loss

BIRMINGHAM—Wilfred LeFebvre, the Little Rock Traveler's ace southpaw, suffered his third loss of the season as the Birmingham Barons pounded out a 9-to-4 victory in the opening game of a three-game series here Thursday night.

LeFebvre allowed 10 hits before he was replaced by Walter Schaeffer, newly acquired right-hander, in the sixth inning. Schaeffer also was hit hard but Manager Herb Brett didn't take time to warm up another pitcher.

Hawley, Baron right-hander, had things his own way and held the Travelers to six hits through the eighth. In the ninth, the Travelers livened up the game with a threatening rally, which produced two runs, but a double play ended all doubts. Hawley was replaced by Charley Bauers.

Tracy Uses Minimum of Make-Up for Roles; He Has That Kind of Face

Spencer Tracy's face, which he says is "a mug that can't be disguised," is generally credited with being the one feature about the star that has helped make his screen portrayals one hundred per cent genuine and helped the state to become one of Hollywood's greatest actors.

Although he claims his face is just an Irish "pan," it is typical American and has resulted in his playing all-American roles, latest of which is as Thomas Edison in "Edison," the Man, opening Sunday at the Saenger theatre.

Tracy has portrayed only one role not strictly American. It was as Manuel, the Portuguese fisherman in "Captains Courageous," which won him his first Academy award. However, the role was an Americanized foreign-born character, and Tracy played the part without making up his face. He simply curled his hair.

In playing Edison, as he did in portraying such other real-life Americans as Father Flanagan, Major Robert Rogers and Henry M. Stanley, he did his characterization without make-up in a majority of his scenes.

Tracy has never had to carry his art into other nationalities and he is proof of the fact that Americans live lives that are dramatically interesting. As far as one can look into the future roles lined up for the star, only one non-American part looms, that of Cyrano de Bergerac, which will be something new for him.

It is strange to remember that the man with the typically American face was brought to the screen to play gangsters and gunmen. While these mobsters were not typically American, they certainly were native only in America, so were "part of American life," Tracy began to branch out and gave indication of his typical

War Makes Ghost Town of London

Shops and Homes Vacated by Fearful Population

By MILTON BRONNER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
LONDON.—London—city of millions today one of the devastated cities of Europe.
Not because it has been bombed, but because of the fear it may be bombed. The devastation takes the form of business shop after shop being vacated; of street after street of residences being empty of tenants; of flats that are dusty and deserted.
When war was declared the authorities in anticipation of a possible bombing attack evacuated nearly one million London children and, in many cases, their mothers. They were made to leave the poorer quarters of the town.
The rich and the socially elite evacuated themselves. They had a better hole in the country. And there many of them have stayed. Their absence naturally affected the business of the retail shops and the restaurants.
A measure of what all this has meant is given in a sort of apology issued by the Central London Electricity Company.
"In most American towns when an electricity company raises its rates, it simply does so and that's that. But in London company felt an obligation to its customers to tell them why it had to make them pay more. It explained this was due to three reasons, and two of them graphically show wartime conditions in London.
"First: Since the beginning of the war more than 15,000 consumers of electricity furnished by the company have vacated their premises and asked that the current be discontinued or they simply left and did not even trouble to have the current disconnected. Only 5000 have returned.
"Even more serious is the loss of revenue from big office blocks and business premises which, though still connected with the company's mains, are occupied by skeleton staffs or are completely empty. The usual West End shops reported no trade. Hotels closed down whole floors on their banqueting rooms, and hundreds of small residential hotels and boarding houses went out of business entirely.
"Second: The blackout hit the company hard. The thousands of electrically illuminated signs all over the Piccadilly-Leicester Square—Oxford Street—Regent Street section of town were shut off. Ninety-one miles of street lighting in this section were cut out and the shop windows in the retail section were of course no longer lighted up after dark.
"At the outbreak of war all the theaters and movie houses shut down for seven weeks. Since then the movies have reopened on staggered hours, but many of the theaters still remain closed.
"The company operates in the heart of the town—the retail shop, theater, hotel, and swankier residence section of London. It was not possible, therefore, to make up for this loss of business by an increased revenue from factories working night and day on war contracts. These new and old factories are mainly located in the outlying sections of town.
"The first four months of the war brought the company a total loss in consumption of 54,000,000 units—a decrease of 27 per cent, compared with the same period the year before. This meant the loss of a million dollars in revenue.
"Third: The cost of coal has gone up to double what it was in 1935. As there is every indication coal will be even more expensive it is estimated that soon the cost per electric unit will be 50 per cent greater than in 1935.
"Municipal taxes have gone up. Another heavy item of cost has been air raid precautions. Owing to its vulnerable position, the company had to take elaborate measures to ensure, as far as possible, that there would be no dangerous breakdown or interruption of supply in its area—the most important in the nation's capital."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Text: Ezekiel 18:1-18
By WILLIAM E. GILROY, D. D.,
Editor of Advance
A lesson on personal responsibility seems very important in our age and under present conditions. The indifference of so many processes in our modern life makes possible a shirking of duty that was not always so easy. It was Paul's principle that if a man did not work, neither should he eat, but in former ages this was very much the law of life and circumstance as well.
Man depended for his existence very directly upon his work. By now, in an era of abundance, when even those who do not toil may live by the toil of others, there is the danger of a natural slothness and of failing to realize the necessity of personal responsibility. Yet, no nation or society can prosper where the sense of individual responsibility becomes disregarded or weakened.
The very bywords of our modern life indicate something of this lack of personal responsibility. We say, "Let George do it," or we speak of "passing the buck," and both bywords are the expression of slothness.
Here in our lesson an ancient prophet speaks very plain and uncompromising words to Israel, and in the golden text, with its declaration that "each one of us shall give account of himself to God," an apostle or prophet of many years later reinforces the truth that Ezekiel had declared.
What has Ezekiel to say about personal responsibility? First, that sin and wickedness inevitably bring their results. Long before Ezekiel, and older writer in Israel had declared, "Be sure your sin will find you out." Man is responsible for his deeds and he bears their consequences. It is not only the prophet that says so, it is life and experience that make that declaration.
Nor is a man responsible only for his own acts. He has some responsibility for others. The man who takes an attitude of indifference—who says, "I'll attend to my own life; I have no responsibility for anyone else"—is himself assuming a wrong and wicked attitude.
A man who has any moral responsibility has the responsibility of a watchman. It is his duty to dissuade others from evil, to warn them concerning the consequences of evil, just as a man would be bound to warn a fellow human being whom he saw walking into a dangerous hole or walking toward a cliff.
There is a stern and relentless law that affects us all in the matter of life and conduct. But Ezekiel is equally definite in declaring that God, who is the upholder of the universe, takes no delight in penalties for evil. His great purpose is redemption, and this is borne out not only in the gospel of grace, but also in the law of nature.
If the powers of the body in health and healing were not stronger than the powers of disease, life could not go on. All of nature and grace are directed toward man's salvation and redemption. But this lesson strongly and necessarily enforces the part that man himself must play.

Will Be Turning

most of these immediately in the U. S. program.
With the allied orders, the industry began wholesale replacement of its own plant equipment. Today it has probably the most modern equipment in its history. Simultaneously, the industry began training new men, lengthening work schedules with three-and-a-half day overtime, introducing multiple shifts, letting work out to smaller shops.
But expansion nears the limit, without additional plant floor and new buildings. The industry hesitates to add these without some sort of government protection against what happened after the World War.
Then the industry plunged from a $225,000,000 peak in 1919 to $20,000,000 in 1921, and 75 companies went broke.
Domestic Orders Come First
The machine tool industry comprised of about 250 companies, concentrated in the area east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, will do much better than $300,000,000 in 1940. Fifty-five per cent of the 1939 total was foreign buying. Since January, the proportion of domestic business has increased. The industry places domestic business first.
If there is a jam in the new device program, machine tool men expect it in personnel in the airplane plants themselves. There was a scarcity of skilled mechanics even before the war, especially die cutters, tool makers. One big company has been hiring 75 men a day since last September.
Building airplane motors with interchangeable parts (3500 in a big bomber) calls for highest order of skilled work with precision machines shading to a "tolerance" of one-tenth of one-thousandth of an inch.
Executives estimate machine tool operators should have a minimum of six months training to handle these precision tools, which means the real push on President Roosevelt's program couldn't be expected before late fall. It would also take at least until then to formulate the gigantic plan.
It is this planning job the industry feels may turn into a tremendous traffic jam—with army, navy, air corps all racing at the same time.
One spokesman said frankly, "This is a job for the industrialist, to get the right plane at the right place at the right time."
The industry is confident the President's program can be completed in two years; with utmost expansion, in less time than that.

are perfectly feasible. One is over the Atlantic by way of Iceland and Greenland to Canada and the other is over the Pacific, by way of Siberia, Alaska and the Pacific Coast islands.
Colonel Mitchell was the first American officer under fire in the World War and (April 22, 1917) the first American flying officer to cross the enemy lines.
Area Vital to U. S.
Seventeen years later, he said: "Of all the large cities in the world, New York offers the ideal target for aerial attack. Although the United States generally is fortunate in this respect, because of its size, should the triangle formed by Chicago, Minneapolis, Bay and Bangor, Maine, be laid waste by an attacking air force and complete mastery of the air be obtained by a foe, for the United States to continue any resistance would be futile and well-nigh impossible."
In 1918, Brigadier-General Mitchell, head of our overseas air force, was given the Distinguished Service Cross and the Distinguished Service Medal "for repeated acts of extraordinary heroism." He also was decorated with two British orders and was made a member of the French Legion of Honor.
Three years later, he was advocating a separate air force independent of the army and navy, but with all three branches under a single "department of national defense." In 1921-22-23, he commanded the air force in a series of experiments to prove that planes could sink a submarine, a destroyer, a cruiser, and three battleships. The experiments were successful.
Demoted For Activities
In June, 1925, the general was "broken" to a colonel and "sent to Texas" because of "outspoken military criticism." In mid-winter of that year, he was court-martialed, found guilty, and suspended from the army. A few months later, his resignation was accepted.
For several years, in speech and print, he continued his fight with such statements as "Surface navies have entirely lost their mission of defending a coast because aircraft can destroy or sink any seacraft coming within their radius of operation. If sufficient aircraft are not on hand at the beginning of a war, supremacy in the air can never be obtained."
The "Stormy Petrel" of American aviation died February 19, 1936, at the age of 57. He was buried at Milwaukee with military honors.

even as it acknowledged withdrawals. On the west flank, German advance elements made a march totaling nearly 17 miles from the region of Abbeville. This was a push to the Bresle river along the channel coast as part of a southward encircling movement. But this did not put that invading wing any nearer to Paris. It did take the Nazis within 75 miles of Le Havre.

the neutrality law of 1939. It's the same principle that we do in private life when we trade in a used car on a new one. He predicted "the whole nation will applaud this act, as the part of the president in giving in this indirect way aid to the Allies now in a perfectly legal manner when civilization is at the crossroads and the American people and Hitler will not be able to reach our shores. Surely no one in the Senate but will join in commending the president for his action."
Senator Holt (Dem., W. Va.) said the plane deal was "just another edging toward a declaration of war. The American people should let it be known they do not want any of this. It's just a trial balloon for a more definite direct step into war."
Senator King (Dem., Ill.) said he had "no objections if they want to sell some old planes. If the airplane company wants to give them away, sell, or even burn them, why, that's their business."
Senator Norris (Ind., Neb.) said: "I don't know of any law that would violate. I understand it's much the same as turning in an old car on a new one." He added he did not know enough about the transaction to comment as to whether he favored it.
Senator Lundeen (F. L., Minn.) said the deal was "getting into war through the backdoor. If these planes are so old and obsolete that we're willing to sell them, how can they win a war over there? The answer is they are good planes."
Services at Evening Shades Sunday at 11 a. m., also at 8 p. m. Held each 2 and 4 Sundays. Sunday School and Training course each Sunday.
